ANTIQUES

The Antiques category has greatly contributed to eBay's growth since the site's inception in 1995. In the early days of eBay, according to one longtime seller, half or more of all sales were from this category, which featured many one-of-a-kind items. But now, with the vast range of items available throughout the site, antiques and collectibles have dropped to about 12 percent of the total merchandise sold on the site.

Because older, rarer items are generally more valuable, it's not surprising that the items in the Antiques subcategories have higher average final sales prices than many other eBay categories. For example, in the Antiques ▶ Furniture ▶ Cabinets, Armoires, Cupboards subcategory, the average sales price is around $630, based on a sample of 1,000 auctions. Compare that with about $36.00 for, say, the Home & Garden ▶ Bedding ▶ Bedspreads, Coverlets category.

The Antiques category is like a microcosm of eBay, only with older, rarer versions of the items you can find in other categories. For that reason, if you are browsing and not searching, you may want to check the corresponding non-antique eBay category as well for what you seek; a seller may have listed an antique German beer stein, for example, in the Ceramics, Porcelain category under Decorative Arts, within Antiques, but also in Collectibles ▶ Breweriana, Beer Drinkware, Steins ▶ Steins ▶ Germany.

Beware of Fakes and Reproductions

Because antiques need to be genuinely old to be valuable (there was some discussion on the eBay Antiques discussion board as to how many years old something needs to be to be considered an "antique," with most agreeing around 100 years—although clearly there are exceptions to this throughout the category), buyers need to be very careful about purchasing in this category. Recently, a rash of items of questionable authenticity have come on the market, many of which are based in China, according to discussion on the eBay Antiques board. One seller said the Chinese antiques section was “perhaps the only site in the world where one can buy a ‘genuine’ T’ang dynasty bowl for less than the price of a Big Mac.” He said the only true statements coming from these sellers is that the specimens are in excellent condition—“understandable since they were probably made last week!”

But another seller pointed out that some people like the reproductions for the high degree of artistic skill they often show: “Buy a $49 T’ang camel by all means, and enjoy it for what it is. But please don’t bore us with your astonishment when you discover it isn’t 1800 years old,” he said.

Of course, fakes and reproductions are not limited to the Chinese antiques categories; they can be found in antiques from any subcategory, as well as in other main eBay categories, such as Clothing, Shoes & Accessories. One seller commented that it seemed like “every commode with a cabriole leg” was purporting to be French. So the bottom line for you as a buyer is “caveat emptor”—buyer beware; and do your homework. Thoroughly check a seller’s feedback, and look for reputable dealers, if possible. If you can get a certificate of authenticity from the seller, great. (As a seller, bear in mind that offering such guarantees can net you a higher final sales price as well as good feedback from your buyers.)

Remember that, in general, genuine antiques are going to cost genuine money, as one seller put it. Look for a good return policy, and don’t forget to check shipping charges, especially for items from foreign countries. Some sellers make most or all of their profits in this area. As an example, on the low end of the Antiques ▶ Rugs, Carpets subcategory, one rug that the seller says is 70 to 80 years old sold for $0.99, but with $55.00 shipping and handling. Of course, these rugs are heavy, and shipping will not be cheap, but be sure to look carefully at shipping costs to get an idea of your total cost.

Another thing to bear in mind when shopping for antiquities located in their native lands is that some countries have laws forbidding exporting of ancient artifacts if there is not an established owner. (In some cases the government’s permission may be needed.)

In some cases, the items in the Antiques subcategories are not even presented as antiques, but replicas, such as the reproduction (albeit evidently high quality) sculpture of ancient Egyptian pharaoh Tutankhamen’s burial mask, which sold for $4,900.00: “This extraordinary sculpture has been made using the very same ancient technique that was used by Egyptians centuries ago - polished graphite with the aspect of black basalt covered by layers of bronze,” reads the description. The materials used for the piece were evidently expensive: the face of Tutankhamen was covered by a layer of 24-karat gold, and the blue finishes were created using a powder of blue lapis lazuli—“exactly as the ancient goldsmiths of Egypt did.”

Low Sellers and Bargains

What sells for the lowest prices in the Antiques category? It varies, of course, but items of questionable age and bad condition are two such types of things. For example, an item in the Antiques category may not necessarily be an antique—the seller might not give the item’s age, or perhaps doesn’t know.

Some buyers find a bargain by betting on whether or not something is genuine or valuable when it is not clear. One seller in the Antiques ▶ Books, Manuscripts ▶ American subcategory offered up this cheeky teaser of an auction title: “Probably Not a Photo of WALT WHITMAN.” The auction description reads, in part, “This is probably just an old guy with a big white beard sitting next to an open window. It probably is not an original mounted photograph of one of America’s greatest poets. But there is that beard, and I have seen photos of Walt Whitman in a similar pose. There is no information anywhere on the photo or mount regarding subject, photographer, location, or date.” Someone took a chance on this, and paid only $0.99.

Other items sell for a low price because they are, quite frankly, just not that attractive, or even odd. I once read a description of a long, orange, antique cylindrical light fixture that the seller characterized as “very unique . . . not sure of its purpose in life.” It sold for $2.50.

But aside from the offbeat and the questionable, there are some great bargains to be found in the Antiques category if you look around carefully enough. I find that if you get past the prices that are so low as to be gimmicky, such as $0.01 to $0.99, with high shipping usually tacked on, you can find some interesting items that may not be from a famous maker but are nonetheless desirable. For example, some cool old maps, offered by a PowerSeller with a good feedback rating, sold for only $2.99: “2 Very Old Maps 1589 Maris Pacifica/West Pacific might have been pages from old books mounted on boards unsure. Def. very early 1589 and they don’t appear to be repros,” reads the description.

High Flyers and Notables

Of course, there is much more here than inexpensive artifacts. The category is chock-full of amazing, unique, and expensive items. There are two Civil War diaries in the Books, Manuscripts ▶ American subcategory. An “1862 CIVIL WAR SOLDIER DIARY BATTLE CONTENT MI 4TH REG” sold for $3,051.00 (there is a photo of the front page of the journal, on which, poignantly, “Remember me” is written in cursive). The other, “Authentic Civil War Diary Journal George W. Miller 1863,” went for $699.00.

The Civil War, a popular flashpoint for items in many categories, pops up again with high prices in such Antiques subcategories as Science & Medicine, including an old Civil War-era “U.S. Hosp. Dept.” bottle, a brown glass bottle that sold for $711.50. Other things in this subcategory, while being interesting from an academic (or morbid curiosity) standpoint, are a bit macabre: the “REAL HUMAN SKULL, RARE, MIXED DENTITION” ($600.00). As the seller wrote in the description, “This skull if from a child of approximately six years of age and has the best display of mixed dentition this seller has ever seen! As can be seen in the images, it has artfully dissected by a skilled doctor of German descent to reveal the presence of ALL OF THE PERMANENT TEETH ON THE LEFT SIDE!” If you want something a bit cheaper, there is the “NIGHTMARISH! Rare FREAKS Old GRAPHIC PHOTO MEDICAL BOOK” featuring “ALLIGATOR PEOPLE! PINHEADS! DWARFISM! DEFORMED LIMBS!” ($60.00).

But strangeness aside, there are truly some exquisite items throughout the Antiques category, especially on the high end of the price ranges. The Gorham “SHEAF OF WHEAT set for 12,” which sold for $2,599.00; the “Elegant Empire French Crystal Chandelier” at $1,825.00; and the ancient Hindu stone statue (“museum piece 16th century”) at $2,500.00. A Meissen centerpiece (a valuable German type of porcelain) sells for $2,950.00 in the Decorative Arts ▶ Ceramics, Porcelain subcategory, and a glance down the high column here reveals other famous old makers such as Wedgwood, Jacob Petit, and Boch & Cateau.

With larger items, such as furniture, the upper end of prices often goes even higher, with an American Renaissance bedroom set, circa 1875, being one of the highest here at $15,999.00, and a French Country armoire, circa 1850, going for $5,600.00.

But let’s not forget the stuff in the middle—you don’t have to be a millionaire to pick up items that fall into the average price range. Need a piece to complete your silver set? You can pick up a Reed & Barton Marlborough serving shell for $50.99, or a William & Mary place setting by Lunt for $58.99 (a new one will run you around $150.00 to $180.00, retail). And that’s the fun of the Antiques category for many people: eBay did not, contrary to some contrarians, take away the thrill of the hunt for these old, rare items—it just moved a lot of it online. It made it more accessible for many people, but didn’t remove all the challenges, since that perfect find for you may take several weeks or months and saved-searches for you to track down on eBay. So do be wary in this category, but, by all means, have fun.
